DETAILED ACTION

Election/Restrictions

1. Restriction to one of the following inventions is required under 35 U.S.C.

121:

- I. Claims 1-7, drawn to plane commutator, classified in class 310, subclass 233.
- II. Claims 8-10, drawn to plane commutator, classified in class 310, subclass 235.
- III. Claims 11-13, drawn to method of manufacturing a plane commutator, classified in class 29, subclass 596.

The inventions are distinct, each from the other because of the following reasons:

2. Inventions I and II are related as combination and subcombination.

Inventions in this relationship are distinct if it can be shown that (1) the combination as claimed does not require the particulars of the subcombination as claimed for patentability, and (2) that the subcombination has utility by itself or in other combinations (MPEP § 806.05(c)). In the instant case, the combination as claimed does not require the particulars of the subcombination as claimed because invention I does not require having an engagement hole in a spline-shaped form and having a plurality of radial groove nor having a pocket form in each radial groove and having the base of the commutator being made of metal powder. Also, it is not require for the base of a commutator to be made of more metal powder than the surface as require by claim 10. Also, it is not require for a commutator in invention II to have the base plate being bent or being made of press plate or having projections with tapered ends and having the commutator base portion with a lower electric resistance than the surface of the commutator (claim 6). The subcombination has separate utility such as using commutator for different purposes such as driller and power tools where it is important to deliver sufficient output torque.

3. Inventions I and III are related as process and apparatus for its practice. The inventions are distinct if it can be shown that either: (1) the process as claimed can be practiced by another materially different apparatus or by hand, or (2) the apparatus as claimed can be used to practice another and materially different process. (MPEP § 806.05(e)). In this case invention III requires for the extending projections of each segment to have the outside diameter of each projection with a larger size than the inner diameter of the holes. Also, it is not require for invention I to have the holes shave as require by the method of manufacturing. Moreover, having a prescribed size larger than the sum of a dimensional forming tolerance of the projections is not required in the making of plane commutator as disclosed by invention I, however, such requirement is essential for the making of invention III.

4. Because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and have acquired a separate status in the art as shown by their different classification, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper and because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and have acquired a separate status in the art because of their recognized divergent subject matter, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper.
